Joshua Maintaining IBO's Gold Standard At Heavyweight

Ask a fan to name the most accomplished heavyweight champions – or the champions to whom the loftiest potential has been attached – of the most recent generation.

Chances are good the names you'll hear are Lennox Lewis, Wladimir Klitschko and Anthony Joshua.

Ask that same fan about the heavyweight champions who've served as the sport's greatest ambassadors in that time frame, and chances remain excellent you'll hear the very same responses.

For the last 17 years – a span covering 29 fights across four U.S. states and six countries – each and every IBO heavyweight title event has involved a man named Lewis, Klitschko or Joshua.

And from the moment Lewis claimed the vacant throne against Evander Holyfield in 1999, to Joshua's inaugural defense in front of 75,000 fans last month in Wales, the IBO belt has represented the division's gold standard by every conceivable measure.

Lewis, an International Boxing Hall of Famer since 2009, defended three times before a shocking KO loss to Hasim Rahman in April 2001 – then returned seven months later to decisively erase Rahman and kick off a career-defining run that yielded defeats of Mike Tyson and Vitali Klitschko through June 2003.

He lost just two times in a 44-fight career, and stopped both foes in rematches.

But he's appreciated as much these days for the way he handled himself outside the ring.

"People find me easy to talk to," he told GQ Magazine. "I don't look like boxers are supposed to look like – rough guys that cause trouble and fight all the time. In one sense, I'm an ambassador of my sport in the best way I know how. Plus, with the help of my mother bringing me up the right way.

"(Life) should be filled with me touching people's lives in different ways. Whether it's as a sporting champion or whether it's as a businessman. I think I spread a certain kind of positive energy around. I want when people talk about me for them to say, 'Yeah, he's a good, solid person.'"

The pedestrian post-Lewis state of the division rendered the IBO title vacant for a few years, until Klitschko earned it with a convincing seven-round blowout of Chris Byrd in Mannheim, Germany.

That victory began a reign that ultimately put Klitschko in the company of legends.

He successfully risked the belt 18 times over nine-plus years – including 13 by KO – placing him third all-time behind Joe Louis (25) and Larry Holmes (19) in consecutive defenses.

He lost a surprising decision to underdog Tyson Fury in November 2015, then announced his retirement after falling in 11 rounds to Joshua in what'll surely get a lot of votes as 2017's best fight.

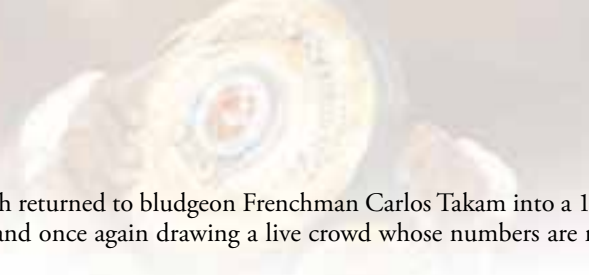

He exited with 64 wins and 53 KOs in 69 fights, but, like Lewis before him, is recognized just as much for the dignified way he wore the crown as for the violence he created while competing for it.

"Wladimir Klitschko earned his right into the Hall of Fame years ago," said HBO executive Peter Nelson, whose network televised many of Klitschko's fights. "His accomplishments in the ring will be immortalized in the record books. Outside the ring, Wladimir is well-respected as a true ambassador to boxing and role model in the sport."

It's no cinch that Joshua will approach the accomplishments of Lewis and Klitschko.

But it's also no stretch to suggest he's off to a particularly prodigious start.

An Olympic gold medalist before turning pro, Joshua has won each of 20 professional fights by KO and reached the top of the IBO mountain when he climbed off the floor to stop Klitschko in April.

The muscular 6-foot-6 behemoth returned to bludgeon Frenchman Carlos Takam into a 10th-round stoppage on October 28, registering his first defense and once again drawing a live crowd whose numbers are more commonly associated with college or professional football.

His fight with Klitschko brought an estimated 90,000 fans to London's Wembley Stadium, while the one-sided defeat of Takam – who'd arrived as the IBO's No. 16 contender – occurred in front of the aforementioned 75,000.

His talents prompted U.S. cable giant Showtime to ink an exclusive to carry his fights stateside, and he branched into the mainstream with a mid-year appearance on CBS' popular "Late Late Show with James Corden" series. Further evidence of Joshua's evolution continued in late June, when he topped a list of the world's 50 most marketable athletes compiled by London-based SportPro magazine.

The list focused on marketing potential over the next three years and examined how crossovers with influencers from entertainment and other media are changing the world of sporting endorsements, and how the rise of digital sports is creating new heroes and new opportunities for brands.

Joshua was the only boxer on the list, which included 20 Americans and five athletes each from the UK and Canada. Overall, 19 nationalities were represented across 22 sports.

"This is the genuine article, a credible world heavyweight boxing champion who can charm a mainstream audience in a way not seen for a generation," said SportsPro's editor, Eoin Connolly. "He's proved this in the UK, and now has a chance to do it around the world in the years ahead. Fans are flocking to him, brands are flocking to him, and that only looks set to continue."

Although the ratings are based on sources which are believed to be reliable, accuracy cannot be guaranteed. These ratings are the official ratings of the I.B.O. The use by others should be considered for information purposes only at the user's discretion. The ratings are produced by the collation of information based on results of fights. Points are allocated for winning fights the number determined by the quality of opponent. Fighters are normally considered inactive when they have not fought in one year unless currently scheduled to fight. We rate the boxer in the weight class where we feel he is most likely to compete. If we are missing fights of a boxer or are publishing incorrect information please contact us. If you feel your boxer should be rated higher and he has beaten a fighter now rated higher than him in the last 12 months please contact us, iboratings@aol.com.
